Ryan Cooper

Ryan Cooper was born in Papua New Guinea to an Australian missionary family. He worked as a carpenter in New Zealand for six years, before a chance encounter led to him being featured in a DKNY ad campaign in 2006. Work for Armani, Hugo Boss and Esprit followed. Cooper broke into acting on the long-established US soap opera One Life to Live.

Like Nadine Crocker, Cooper is also a scriptwriter. And again like Crocker, his debut project – the short film Left Behind – deals with mental health and depression. "A friend of mine opened up to me about a lot of his life's issues late one night," says Cooper. "It felt as though that opportunity for me to just listen and care was life saving. Left Behind just fell out of me the following morning. My own family history includes mental illness. My grandfather took his life and the shadow of that hung around. And I have fought with a few of the monsters myself."

"I wanted to make a little film that addressed mental illness openly and honestly, in a fictional setting. I believe film should be entertainment and cathartic and I felt this piece was an interesting way to do both. I'm hoping it will be used in schools and online to bring awareness and non-judgemental discussion to the topic. I personally have found when I'm able to talk about my depression and anxiety with others it is cathartic. Isolation breeds fear and can allow insecurities to overtake perspective and reality. When I was isolated and wouldn't share, or wasn't given the opportunity to do so, things got worse. We all need a loving, understanding, educated community in order to first relate and thrive."
