something out her time in that interview. I always wanted to have my own wind farm. We are yet to find it, although I do believe we're very close."

Bax has been involved with wind farms in the past; she was part-owner of Blackwell Lodge in Marazion with her parents, Graham and Helen Gage, and also just owned a wind farm in Kentucky. But this time it's important to Bax that she goes it alone.

"I think when you get to a certain age you need to have your own opinions and freedom over your immediate family," she explains. "Now I've got my kids and my hobby and we're all settled here, it's time to do that."

The model is eager to get her girth boots dirty. But surely Bax's job will be to research the bloodlines of and laws and races to see if their offspring will run fast. "My ultimate goal is to breed as many Group One winners as I can," she says, referring to the most prestigious races only the best horses can enter. "Of course it's every breeder's dream to win a Melbourne Cup or a Kentucky Derby, but I don't think it's about having one successful horse. To me, it's all in the numbers. I want to be the Federico Testa of my time!" The horse racing fraternity will get that reference, for everyone else, Testa, an Italian, is considered the most important breeder in the history of horse racing. By she's writing high. "I grew up around this industry. It's what I've always wanted to do," she says. "The modelling has allowed me to get to this point."

IN THE BLOOD

And generally what Bax wants, Bax gets. The dream to have Zealandi women her daughters, all born overseas, will get to experience the usual upbringing she values so highly. But any other older two girls who have lived in New York, Greece and Sydney before coming here, are happy and settled. She adds it's also great for them to have grandparents nearby - but is honest about the reality of being flung back into her family after two decades living overseas. "Parents are actually a pain thing for me," she says. "I went to boarding school when I was 13, and left to travel the world straight after I finished school. Does that say they're kind of gotta get to know me because I've been away so long?"

When Bax's folks last had their supermodel daughter at home she was a tall, skinny teen, who had never as much as picked up a copy of Vogue.

"I had short curly brown hair and everyone thought I was a boy," Bax recalls. "My mother was always having to wake up for me." Did that knock her confidence? "Oh no. I've never looked in the mirror."

Her mother, not her, a former beauty queen, was the one who first introduced her to hair and makeup, and eventually she knew girl thought she'd have a go at modelling. She soon caught the attention of the fashion industry, which saw past the 'boyish' to the diamond-cut and sample-size physique.

"I didn't think I was beautiful but people were telling me I should be a model. When you look at a model you either think 'she's gorgeous' or 'she's average looking', but either way when you get them in front of the camera the magic is going to happen. I still don't think I'm beautiful, but I know I do my job well."

When Ben arrived in New York aged 16 she was determined she'd walk through the '90s

I didn't think

I was beautiful but people were telling me I should be a model. I still don't think I'm beautiful. But I know I do my job well.
